Tuesday Anniversary Of Juarez "Bloody Sunday"

Monday was the second anniversary of the taking Juanes by Gen. Francisco villa, from the Huerta federals. Villa executed his famous coup on the morning of November 15, 1912, and captured the town from Gen. Francisco Castro and his command before the federals were aware that Villa was within the were aware that Villa was within the town.

He captured a federal train, telegraphed to the garrison that this train would be in at night and signed the message with the name of the conductor of the train which had been out on repair work. The fighting which followed the discovery of Villa's troops in the main streets was of short duration and Gen. Castro escaped to the American side.

Following the capture of the town, was "bloody Sunday," when many of the officers and men of the federal garrison were executed at the Juarez cometers.
